

STRAIGHT FROM SAM

As we get into the heart of summer, I hope everyone finds time to step away from work and spend it with the people who matter most.

Construction is a demanding business. The days are long. The pace is fast. There is always another job to start, another deadline to hit, and another problem to solve. The work is important, but it is not everything.

Some of the best moments in life happen away from the jobsite. Around a campfire. At the ball field. On a family vacation. Sitting on the deck after a long day. Those are the memories that stay with us long after the work is done.

I believe we work to live, not live to work. The goal is not just to build great projects. It is to build a great life for ourselves and our families along the way.

Enjoy the summer. Recharge. Make some memories. The work will be here when you get back.

INDEPENDENCE DAY REFLECTION: HONORING THE PEOPLE WHO BUILD AMERICA

As we celebrate the Fourth of July and the freedoms that define the nation, Independence Day is also a time to recognize the hardworking people who help build and sustain our country every day. Construction workers, such as yourself, play a vital role in creating the infrastructure our communities depend on, including schools, hospitals, and entertainment buildings. The skill, dedication, teamwork, and commitment to safety continue a long tradition of helping America grow stronger. This Independence Day, we honor YOU, our construction professionals whose work shapes the nation's future and thank you for your lasting contributions to our country!

WISHING EVERYONE A SAFE, ENJOYABLE, AND WELL-DESERVED INDEPENDENCE DAY.
